I've been looking into the different kites available on the market, and have gathered the opinion that the words well-balanced and vintage have become synonymous, and that any kite that is marketed and sold as a vintage kite is considered fair game for any old kites. This is obviously not entirely true. So my question is, does the age of a kite actually matter? Can that old kite on the water behave differently, given different weights to kite ratio, than a newer kite? Take the following as a scenario: Same sized kite Different sized batteries The weight and the length of the lines is same. Both kites (vintage and modern) have the same amount of juice in them, the same weight of bag. They are the same length in their lines. They have the same ratio of battery to kite. They both fly at the same rate, have the same wind speed. The only difference, of course, is that one is an old kite, and one is a newer kite. Would I be able to assume, from this scenario, that the two kites would behave similarly? Would the vintage kite have the advantage in a headwind? No, correct? A: If the kite, weight, bag, etc. are equal, then yes, they will behave the same way on water. At least assuming the wind remains constant. However, if one kite is lighter and floats higher in the air, it will reach the wind faster, catch the wind sooner and change the kite's angle in the air. In the end, this means it will have a higher airspeed and a longer distance. So it will catch the wind farther upwind. If it is an older kite, this means the kite will drop downwind and slow down sooner. Likewise, if one kite is heavier and sinks lower in the water, it will go faster underwater, which means that it reaches the bottom sooner.

The SIV-nef, Nef, and Tat genes of a wild type SIVmac have been cloned into the low copy plasmid pRSVneo, containing both SIV LTRs. The virus was transfected into C8166 cells using the calcium phosphate method. Stable transfectants were isolated and the expression of SIV proviral sequences was confirmed by integration site PCR. These cells are being used to determine the influence of SIV-Nef, Nef and Tat on cell cycle progression and the activation of cellular growth regulatory genes. Q: How to use docker.service on Ubuntu 16.04 I recently installed Docker on my ubuntu 16.04 installation, and have set the service to run on startup using a specific command that works. However, when I launch the service I get the following error: job failed: no matching index found. You need to specify the owning resource (e.g. 'docker.service', 'docker1'). The command I have tried is: sudo systemctl enable docker.service Any suggestions? A: You have to remove the dependency section to make docker running as system level service sudo systemctl enable --now docker.service Now you can have the missing dependency and It should work.
