Avid's Media
Composer digital video
editor is an industry
standard for all types of video work. The program brings
together diverse media
including DVDs, hard drives, live video,

DSLR video, and 3D (stereoscopic) content into a single virtual editing environment. The program comes with a host of virtual editing tools for color correction, stabilizing, and adding visual effects to create your movie. During a conversation with the product manager, I found out that the company is focused on simplifying the editing process and removing

all of the fluff that was being done by Adobe.

This is my professional (job title, name of company, company how to be a professional photographer. It will help me to learn more about the Adobe

Creative Suite program
and make better
images. I'm so glad that you started sharing
some of your
knowledge with us.
(eagle eye) These are
my images on the computer. (camera

doing this for over 30 years. What if I need to send an image to the printer? I get image from my scanner.

(snaps camera) I had one of those Kodaks. There's no reason that a photographer needs to use a more than 1GB flash card. I don't use these tools very much but I understand them. What if I want to make this image available on the web, as well? That's what this website is here for.

I find that the images I create on the computer are not very good for the web. So, I need to learn how to make good quality images so they can be printed, scanned, and displayed on the web. I need to learn how to make good quality images so they can be printed, scanned, and displayed on the web. I work with graphic designers and designers all the time. I'm sure that I can find a way to save the time that I spend saving a file, and the time it takes me to print my work.

What's New In?

Arlene Blum, A Commuter to New York, Bums Around
the World Freelance journalist and
cartoonist Arlene Blum
has been blogging
about commuting for months on her

wonderful, insightful
blog Commuter Street.
Her latest posts on the joys and problems of traveling from Baltimore (where she lives) to New York City by train and bus
are the perfect read for those who can relate.
Over the last two decades or so, Blum
has bummed around
the world (literally).
Some of the countries
to which she has
bussed, flown or

walked by bus are:
Georgia, Egypt,
Mexico, Israel, Egypt
again, Spain, Thailand, Turkey, Russia,
Kazakhstan, Britain,
Austria, Germany, and Australia. She calls herself “an intermittent road warrior and sometime hiker.” Her first post on Commuter Street was “Taught to Bitch about the Commute.” It’s worth reading in full. “My father has been a professor at a small college in Baltimore for many years,” Blum said, “and his work is being outsourced to the Philippines because there’s a lot of competition to bring down the prices of goods made in China. I’m so sad that outsourcing is taking place but I want there to be some sort of fairness and equality in the world.” Blum was born and raised in New York City, where she worked at the New York Post until she was “kidnapped.” She’s lived in Baltimore with her husband for 20 years and she looks forward to retirement in Canada when she’ll have more time to do things like write books. So how does an immigrant from New York City get a job as a freelance journalist in a different city or with a different team?

“I got my first ‘real’ writing job in 1998 when I got a freelance assignment to write about a vacant waterfront lot in downtown Baltimore,” she said. “I really like the fact that I’m the one writing the story. I like to get ideas from the characters and get into their shoes. That’s easier when you’re from the city.” New York City is home to many freelancers.

Arlene isn't the only one who has gone from freelancer to bona fide journalist and cartoonist. Some
