In FIFA 19, you can see animation of player movements during all aspects of game play. This was a feature first introduced with FIFA 16. Building on the success of FIFA 19, FIFA 22 will again put players in complete control of all aspects of gameplay via real-time movement visualisation and animation of the ball and surrounding players. We are excited to share more details with players on the game's enhanced Player Impact Engine: Here's the overview of what's being delivered for the world's favourite sport on PlayStation 4 this August. - WE'RE MOVING THE GAME TO REAL-TIME PlayStation 4's advanced hardware gives us incredible graphics and a vast array of gameplay options. But this comes at the cost of visual fidelity, as detailed character models and particles required for the game's presentation are limited to the frame rate of the GPU. The traditional solution to this problem was to use a lower frame rate to reduce the graphical demands of the game. However, when game developers showed off FIFA 19 at E3 2018, they shocked the gaming community with a move to real-time rendering. The so-called "Flexible Frame Rate" system uses dynamic frame rates based on the various demands of gameplay. In a FIFA match, that means a large part of the gameplay is spent running or sprinting. Running time is mostly an animation of the foot or the lower body, which cannot be approximated with traditional graphics techniques. This was a revolutionary move on the part of the team at EA Sports, and a further sign of how much EA Sports is devoted to capturing the authentic feel of the sport, and bringing new innovations to players. FIFA 22 will continue this mission, bringing a PlayStation 4 experience to life with all-new gameplay options and exciting features. - THE INTEGRATED GPU LIGHTS The PlayStation 4 is a powerful computing platform. But the graphics hardware needs power to run complex simulations that update every frame, in order to create a vibrant, lifelike game world. This is why EA Sports has chosen to employ the latest GPU lights technology to power FIFA 22. The GPU lights technology in FIFA 22 helps to achieve more lifelike lighting and shadows, as the game now runs with lighting and shadow rays that run all the way through, with every plane of a character; making
